The Citizen.

HERE AND THERE.

The other day the Outsider and the Fellow Citizen were strolling peacefully along, revelling in the beauties of nature assisted by art as exemplified in our little village, when the Outsider spoke in a meditative manner. "Bloomfield is a unique town," said he.

"Yes," assented the F. C. with a glow of satisfied pride on his face. "But what makes you say so?"

"I was thinking of the word itself. Thus, one; equus, horse."

And at the corner their ways parted.

Last week it was mildly hinted that the Humble Individual did'nt devote enough attention to the affairs of Morris Place His excuse is that of the unconverted heathen. He should be saved from wrath. because no ray of wisdom's light has penetrated the darkness of his ignorance. In fact he didn't even know it was dark. This poor Individual began his career much after the fashion of Uriah Heep—"umbly." He never said anything about being ubiquitous, and he regrets his shortcomings.

Mr. and Mrs. Reed and Miss Cleveland are near Penobscot Bay in Maine, while Point Pleasant, not satisfied with its Bloomfield colony, has begun a Glen Ridge settlement.

What an intrusive sort of a feeling that Greenwood Lake station always gives one!

Tearing up to the door when the train is already in sight and there is no time to spare, one pauses instinctively on the threshold to wonder hurriedly if he ought to take off his hat and send up his card before he enters. Once inside he isn't much relieved. He has still that unpleasant sensation of trespassing in someone's private hallway, and makes a dash for the other door as soon as possible. But we shall "have changed all that" before so very long, because the Bird said something about a boon which futurity and authority combined are about to confer upon a grateful town—a station of noble dimensions and palatial appearance, just to keep us from feeling so much like house-breakers when we take the train.

There is a small bootblack who plies his trade in the Centre, and is fast becoming well known.

His worldly treasures are his box and its contents, his unworldly riches a grateful heard and a pair of pathetic eyes.

The other day the Humble Individual saw a funny sight.

Three or four of our boys had decided that an improvement in the general aspect of the small son of Italy was greatly to be desired, and forthwith they had taken him in hand. At the instigation of one of the boys, he had removed his well-worn shoes and what did duty for a pair of stockings and donned others clean and whole.

His ragged little suit had been replaced by a better one, a new hat shone resplendent above the puzzled face, and when the Humble Individual caught sight of the group, the Italian child stood in the middle taking his first object-lesson in the great truths of love and common brotherhood.

Before him, on one knee, bent one of the boys, his forehead gathered in an anxious frown as he painfully tied an elaborate bow in the new neck-tie, and at short distances away, their heads on one side and their whole attention absorbed in careful criticism, stood the others, unwilling that any flaw should appear when the work of their hands should be complete.

The boys didn't tell of it, either; they're not that kind, these boys. But the mothers did, and because it was a beautiful thing done in a beautiful way, the Humble Individual has told it, too.

Township Committee.

Business of interest and importance was discussed at the Township Committee meeting on Monday night. Messrs. Benson and Seibert of the gas committee, stated that they were in receipt of a communication from clerk Henry Yost, of the Montclair Township, informing them that the committee of that town had given their gas committee definite instructions as to what they intended to do in regard to the use of electric lights. A meeting of the joint committees of the two towns was called for Wednesday evening, the 17th. Messrs Benson and Seibert desired instructions from the whole committee as to what they should say to the Montclair representatives. It was stated that it was not officially known just what Montclair intended to do, but it was surmissed that lights would be erected on Bloomfield avenue and the approaches to the railway depots. The carrying out of this plan would shut off about 50 gas lamps. The following of a similar plan in Bloomfield would do away with 60 or 70 gas lamps. Superintendent John Causbrook of the Montclair Gas and Water Co., was given an opportunity to address the committee at this point. He briefly reviewed the past relations of the gas company with the town, how the company had exerted every effort in his power to give satisfactory service. He stated that the company was not a wealthy one, it was just getting fairly established, it had expended thousands of dollars in its endeavor to meet the requirements of the two townships. Mr. Causbrook said that great stress seemed to be laid on the fact that the proposed electric lights would be kept burning all night. If the committee wanted lights on Bloomfield avenue and other leading streets of the town, why did they not so inform the gas company? It was perfectly willing to burn gas all night, and he had no doubt that very satisfactory arrangements could be made. Mr. Causbrook informed the committee that they might derive a great deal more benefit from the lights in operation if they would exercise their power and order the limbs trimmed off a great many of the shade trees in the town. Many lamps were rendered useless by being obscured amid the overhanging branches of an adjoining tree. Mr. Causbrook reminded the committee that two years ago when the subject of electric lights was first broached, the company he represented offered to erect a plant and furnish it as cheap as any other company. He was instructed to renew the offer and requested that his company be given a chance to estimate for the work. Mr. Causbrook was informed that when the committee were fully determined to use electric lights the matter would be open to competiors. On suggestions of Mr. Benson, Mr. Causbrook's suggestions about trimming the trees was acted upon, and it was decided to put the work in the hands of ex-committee man M A. Dailey, a practical nurseryman. The remarks of Mr. Causbrook about lamps burning all night led to a general discussion of the street lighting business. It was very evident that there was a strong disposition not to incur any further expenses in this direction even if the electric project had to be abandoned. Dr. H. E. Richards in speaking on the subject said that the number of people whose business occasioned them to be out after eleven o'clock at night was comparatively few. The whole community was taxed for the benefit of these few. At present any innovation that tended to add to the already sufficiently heavy burden of taxation would meet with stout opposition. He personally would rather favor a measure that would shorten the time of burning gas than lengthen it. Belated travellers could amply protect themselves with a revolver and overcome the inconvenience of darkness by carrying a lantern. Mr. Cook stated that he had been frequently spoken to about the cost of the proposed electric lighting. He was convinced that taxes were sufficiently high and he would oppose any measure that would tend to increase them. If electric lighting was going to cost more than the sum necessary to maintain the gas lamps that it is proposed to abolish, he would vote against its introduction. The disposition to keep down taxes was universal among the members of the committee. Mr. Benson called attention to the discussion going on in Montclair over the sewerage question. It was a subject in which Bloomfield was directly interested and would soon have to take up. He thought it would be good policy to confer with the Montclair committee in the matter. Mr. Cook asked if overtures to that effect had been received from Montclair. Chairman Ward replied in the negative. He said that as Montclair had courteously invited co-operation in the electric light business it was but proper that the invitation to co-operate in the discussion of the sewer problem, should proceed from the Bloomfield committee. Mr. Cook was of the opinion that the discussion of the sewerage question was premature. He favored waiting until after the contract between the East Jersey Water Company and the city of Newark was settled. "It might be possible to use econd Sriver as a means of conveying sewerage offal to the Passaic. The prevailing opinion was that no harm would come of a joint discussion of the matter, and Clerk Farrand was instructed to inform the Montclair committee of Bloomfield's desire.

The general discussion on high taxation led Mr. Dodd to remark that the expenditures for support of poor, for this year, was nearly double that of the same period of time last year. Mr. Benson thought that the present system of supplying the needs of the township poor were capable of improvement. He favored giving the overseer of the poor a higher salary and having him personally buy the provisions and other necessities in bulk and deal them out. The present system of giving orders on stores was open to abuse. Counsel Richards asserted his belief that the town was imposed on by pretensious paupers. In discussing ways and means of preventing abuses of the store order system, Mr. Dodd said he did not think it was in the province of the overseer to restrict the recipients to the purchase of pork and beans. Dr. Richards pronounced pork and beans as very wholesome food.

A request for the erection of a hydrant on Woodland avenue led to a lengthy discussion of the water question. The water committee were empowered to order the hydrant erected.

A communication was received from Phoenix Hose Company requesting an increased allowance of three dollars per month for rent of their building. The request was based on the fact that there was no water in the building and no arrangements for the firemen to clean themselves on returning from a fire. The request was not granted. The matter was referred to the fire committee with instructions to have the water introduced into the building and then let the firemen arrange to suit themselves.

The obstructions to the Broad street sidewalk in front of Mr. William Hill's new building was reported by the sidewalk committee. It was stated that the coping around the area way projected two inches above the grade of the sidewalk. The hinges on the iron doors covering the entrance to the cellar were regarded as dangerous to pedestrians who might be tripped by them. The clerk was instructed to notify Mr. Hill that the matter complained of would have to be remedied.

The township treasurer was authorized to have the township note for the sum of $1500 discounted at the Bloomfield National Bank, the money to be used in anticipation of taxes. Assessor Baxter was instructed to make provision in the assesment roll for gas and water expenditures, the former $7,500 and the latter $6,840. Collector Marr whs instructed to present to the committee the list of delinquent tax payers for 1887, in order that proceedings for selling the property might be commenced. The committee will meet with Engineer Reimer on State street next Monday morning for the purpose of devising a way to get rid of the surface water on that street.

The Village of Arden.

History furnishes many illustrations of country towns by a process of slow growth gradually developing into cities, but the novel experience of a full-fledged city suddenly developing itself in the heart of a township, unbeknown to the majority of taxpayers, is reserved for Bloomfield. Politicians have been electioneering for incorporation, Village Improvement Associations and other powerful influences have been at work endeavoring to induce this conservative old town to throw off its rustic garb and put on the fashionable attire of a city but these have made slow progress. In the meantime a company of enterprising and well-known ladies of the town have been quietly and energetically at work on a similar line. Success has crowned their efforts. They have secured a charter for a city, had streets surveyed, elected a board of selectmen, got a postmaster appointed, established a National Bank, and set all the intricate machinery of municipality in working order. The city is named the Village of Arden. It will be located on the plot of ground east of the First Presbyterian Church, filling up the space between the church and Mr. J. G. Broughton's residence. The new town will be of oriental grandeur and like all oriental cities will have its gate of entrance, which will be midway between the church building and the Lecture Room. The opening of the town will be celebrated on Tuesday afternoon next at four o'clock. All the dignitaries of the city will participate in the opening ceremonies, which will be further enlivened with music by the Village Brass Band. The merchants and business men and women of the city have laid in an unusually large stock of every variety of merchandise which they will dispose of at reasonable prices. The public are all cordially invited to witness the event. All the various branches of art pertaining to a village will be represented.

The Village of Arden is in truth a fair and is being held under the auspices of the Sunday School of the First Presbyterian church. The business houses will be found to be genuine. By way of illustration it may be said that ladies who contemplate buying fruit for canning will find a choice supply of it at the fruit booth, and all the sugar necessary at the country grocery store. The whole scheme, while it is unique and charming, is intended to be intensely practical. The booths will all be arranged about the four sides of the square. The centre will probably be left vacant. The grounds will be illuminated at night. Music Hall will occupy the south side. A small admission fee will be charged. The public are cordially invited.

The great summer special bargain sale announced in THE CITIZEN of last week, by L. S. Plaut & Co., Newark Bee Hive, seems to have taken the populace by storm.

The history of their establishment shows no greater success than that of the past week. The crowds were enormous, so great in fact that it was simply impossible at times to give attention to all who called. Many therefore did not get an opportunity of benefiting from the remarkable low prices that prevail on every article in their stores.

To give every one an equal opportunity to share the great saving, Plaut & Co. have decided to continue their great sale for the coming week, a course which will be appreciated and taken advantage of without doubt by an unlimited number.

Quotations such as follows are made throughout every department:

Shoes were $1,98, now $1,69; Ribbons $1, now 22½ cts; Hose 25 cts pr. now 16 cts; Underwear were 50 cts now 31 cts; Baby Carriages were $10, now $7.97; Boy's suits were $3,50 now $2,47; Trunks were $4,00 now $2,75: Shirts were 65 cts now 54 cts; Umbrellas were $1,98 now $1,69; Parasols were 75 cts now 55 cts: Dress goods were 45 cts now 32 cts, and so on;

There can be little wonder at the great demand for all sale offerings when such a positive saving can be made in each and every purchase. A visit from any one of our readers will undoubtedly be repaid many times over. Their advertisement in an other part of THE CITIZEN speaks for itself.
